

ECCLESIASTICAL VENTURES

Catholic Entrepreneurship for Home-schooling Families

Salvation Through Work

One day a week is dedicated to understanding the Spiritual Component of operating an Ecclesiastical Venture. Saints who started business ventures had one goal in mind; their salvation and the salvation of their co-workers. This requires a Spiritual Director and approach to work rarely if ever found in corporate America.

Daily Life

The daily life of those involved in Ecclesiastical Ventures (EV) is very different from those who spend considerably more time working than praying. Students will learn how the prayer life of a member of an EV flips the work-prayer ratio on its head as it permeates all aspects of and guides their work throughout the day.

Product Design & Development

One needs neither a design or business degree to start and operate their own EV. Many successful entrepreneurs are proof of this. However, approaching design from within a consecrated company is different. Parents and students will learn the basics of 3D Cad design in order to design & develop their products and bring them to market.

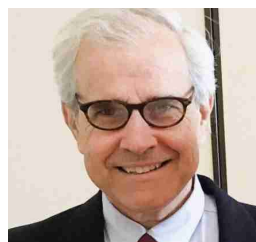

“We are no longer a Christian nation; at least not “just.”

President Obama

Home-schooling parents know the dangers that exist in public education. My wife and I also home-schooled for this reason. Living one’s Faith in the workplace is becoming increasingly difficult if not impossible.

There is an answer; an answer as old as the Church itself. It is to start and operate your own business or join a business that operates on the strictest Catholic Principles. To learn more about this, visit <https://ecclesiasticalventures.com> At the end of the one-page web presentation are links to additional documents.

It is my mission to facilitate the formation of as many Ecclesiastical Ventures as possible. To this end I am offering my services to parents and children that home-school according to the teachings of the Catholic Faith. I will be interviewing parents and students and selecting 30 who will have the opportunity to learn this ancient and proven Catholic approach to work. Email for consideration.

Mark Wilson has founded three startups & is currently the President of Curvware, Inc. He has lectured and taught in both business and design schools at the university level. Under the guidance of his spiritual director, he undertook an in depth study of the formation and operation of the early Florentine guilds. This led to understanding the dire need to regenerate this consecrated approach to business.
